MAXIMISE RETURNS FROM HOTELS

DAVID HARPER

- Property: Ensure that the hotel has real investment potential in its specific trading environment and is suited to your investment needs. It is essential that you have expert advice.
- Management: When an investor buys a hotel, it is buying a business and not just the bricks and mortar. The success of that investment will largely be reliant upon the skills and experience of the management. Even the most highly regarded hotel can struggle to optimise income if improperly managed.
- Operating agreement/lease: Any operating arrangement should be a true partnership between the operating company and the owners. If professional advice is not sought during the drafting stage of an agreement, it is common for clauses to be included that can detract from the value of the investment.
- Continual reinvestment: Keeping all the income can be a false economy. Without adequate annual re-investment from cashflow, the quality of the hotel will decline over time, affecting returns. Reserving around 3-4% of turnover pa should enable the property to remain in good operational condition.
- Asset management: Ensure your agreement allows you to police hotel performance. Maximising value requires optimisation of income.
